LIST OF SCIENTIFIC JOURNALS IN MANAGEMENT – december 2011

The FNEGE Scientific Board

includes the Academic Associations of Management:

Preamble

The FNEGE Scientific Board includes all the Academic Associations of Management representing the community of researchers in the field. The list of scientific journals below is unanimously supported by the 14 scientific associations of the discipline with the shared desire to obtain a categorization that reflects as accurately as possible the specificity of management as a science. This unanimous support from a whole scientific community confers high legitimacy on it.

This list is intended to be used as a reference tool by researchers, laboratories, and on a broader scale by all institutions of management education and research. Although scientific papers do not represent the sole criterion of evaluation¹, the direct and indirect stakes in this journal classification remain considerable, in quantitative terms (given the large number of researchers and students in management – numerous faculty members in universities and Grandes Ecoles, 17.8% of students in higher education) as well as qualitative ones (incentives for publishing, researchers' career progress within Grandes Ecoles and universities, laboratories the evaluation of research teams, international reputation, etc).

The classification of scientific journals of management reflects the discipline's specificity. As a science of action and Decision-making, management is based on many disciplines of exact sciences and human sciences. It is an autonomous body of knowledge whose purpose is to light the way for actions taken collectively by groups of people: firms, associations, administrations, etc.

Management researchers work on concepts and methods needed to solve real-life management problems.

These Situations mobilize knowledge that leads to both develop and cross many "sub-disciplines" of management: Finances, human resources, marketing, accounting, information technology, logistics, entrepreneurship, organization theory, strategy etc. in various applied fields (Health, Sustainable Development, Corporate Social Responsibility, Public Management, International Management, etc).

¹ The Scientific Board wishes to emphasize the necessary role of outputs other than journal articles: books, book chapters, etc.

Each of these sub-disciplines has created its own body of knowledge supported by scientific journals. Some “cross-disciplinary” or “generalist” journals deal with issues that entail crossing areas of knowledge related to the sub-disciplines previously mentioned more often than specialized journals do.

Several observations result from an Analysis of all these journals:

- A wide variety of epistemological and theoretical approaches,
- A similarly wide range of methodological approaches,
- A link that often exists between theoretical approaches and empirical investigations,
- An extensive use of methods and concepts from other disciplines belonging to hard, experimental and human sciences,
- A proper object more or less specialized that defines an identified management issue.

Scientific journals stemming from this diversity show great differences in theoretical, methodological and empirical approaches.

A classification of management journals must not fail to involve the wealth provided by that discipline, being essentially based on criteria of quality and scientific rigor, with no preconceptions about theoretical, methodological or empirical matters.

Classification Principles

The classification carried out by FNEGE’s Scientific Board is based on criteria for evaluating journals shared by all the scientific associations.

First, for the sake of quality and scientific credibility, a reading committee composed of acknowledged peers and a rigorous double-blind evaluation procedure shall be required for each journal. The classified list of journals, specific to management, will be regularly revised by the Scientific Board on the basis of records stating the quality indexes and ensuring full compliance with the established principles in terms of ethics, transparency and rigor in review procedures.

Second, the classification will not be based on subjective judgments but on a set of objective factors and, especially for English-language journals, on international recognition of a journal's quality as demonstrated by the rankings given by international bodies (Dutch, English, German, Australian), the Harzing and ABS (Association of Business Schools) rankings, and to some extent bibliographic indexes (i.e. impact scores with or without self-citations, h-index). There is often great coherence between these rankings.

Third, French-language journals will be judged according to particular criteria, because they are de facto hindered by not being included in many foreign rankings and databases that are the foundation of bibliographical indexes. French-language scientific journals in management are provided with an evaluation grid attached in annex and have been classified by the Scientific Board according to the stated criteria. 46 journals have considered and classified at a quality level similar to that of English-language journals. In doing this, the Scientific Board intended to stress the importance of publishing languages, and particularly the needed to recognise research publications written in an author's native language.

Finally, the journal classification scheme was established in 4 four categories (like that of the CNRS' section 37).

- 1 : The most notable management journals (or sub-disciplines of management). Those journals are the ones that deserve to be especially singled out for both their scientific content and their performances in terms of bibliometric indicators and ranking. They are very selective journals particularly recognized in France and abroad. A few of them are designated by a 1: these are the ones that were deemed to occupy a prominent position in management and sub-disciplines of management science.
- 2 : Highly selective journals submitted to a very demanding peer review process. These highly regarded journals provide major scientific contributions and still have a very high profile and excellent quality indices (ranking, bibliometry, etc.) but to a lesser degree than the journals of rank 1.

- 3 : Journal which meet the principles of arbitration, selectivity and quality that make them very good journals, with a good scientific reputation and significant contributions, nevertheless to a lesser degree than the journals of the first two ranks.
- 4 : Journal which fully meet the principles for the arbitration of scientific journals, they have good selectivity and collect original contributions. They are well recognized and their quality indices are good, but to a lesser extent than the journals of former ranks.

Remarks:

- a. There are strong scientific links between the disciplines of management and those of other sciences. However, these links can be variously valued depending on the disciplines of management and the types of research. Other sciences such as economics, history, sociology, psychology, anthropology and law for example, are the basis of much research in management and sometimes they prevail. It is important that this fact be considered in the assessment of researchers. This is why it is essential that articles written by researchers in management and published in scientific journals of other disciplines are also taken into account. As many laboratories assessed by AERES operate partly or exclusively in the management field, it is necessary that the evaluation rules applied to them take into account the different scientific approaches used in our field of research.
- b. Journals that are intended to be read by practitioners could form a quite legitimate category in this proposed classification. For example, the internationally well known Harvard Business Review and MIT Sloan Management Review are extremely selective journals which could be classified as such. In 2012, FNEGE's Scientific Board will produce a list of unclassified journals of this type that deserve to be singled out so that they can gain greater consideration in evaluation processes.
- c. The world of journals is rapidly changing, especially due to the publishing of new titles either printed or published electronically. It is, of course, impossible to classify newly-issued journals positively (with a rack record of less than two years). In order to make up for the lack of incentive to use the new media entailed by classification, we suggest that those journals should be put in a category named "emergent". This will draw potential authors' attention to them and facilitate future updating of the list by evaluation bodies. The list below mentions several emerging French-language journals.

- d. The proposed classification is provided as a guide to the field of management journal. However, it should not be seen as a definitive or prescriptive list. It is important that assessors take the time to read the researchers' works and projects, to assess their activities in all segments of the profession. For example, reference books are to be taken into account as well as other types of intellectual contributions that are not referenced in relation to the classification.
